RABAU - EAST NEW BRITAIN PROVINCE

In 1994, however, the town had to be evacuated as volcanoes Tavurvur, Vulcan and Rabalankaia erupted. Over 30,000 people left the town itself and a further 50,000 from the surrounding area – without a single injury. The town was covered in volcanic ash in places feet deep. Today the town is being “renovated” in a bid to return to normal living. Many people have moved back and the hotels and shops re-opened. Air services are back to normal and the curious visitor may well think visiting “Volcano Town” part of the unforgettable adventure of a holiday in Papua New Guinea.

As most other Papua New Guinea towns, Rabaul was the scene of WW11 conflict, and wrecks lay among coral reefs and on land. At Bitapaka cemetery over 1000-Allied war dead are buried. Rabaul has an efficient tourist office, which has information on cultural events and festivals, along with maps, pamphlets, and friendly advice. The hillsides around Rabaul are honeycombed with tunnels and caverns built by the Japanese.

Nearly 600 kilometers of these tunnels exist on the Gazelle Peninsula. One huge passage cut into a hillside still houses face barges, lined up nose to tail in readiness for an emergency. The volcano logical Observatory on the slopes of the North Daughter volcano monitors volcanic activity for the whole country.

In the mountainous interior of Rabaul is the home of the Baining people. The Baining's are a little different in appearance to the people of the coast and their beliefs and traditions are quite different and unique. One of such is the Baining Fire Dance; this performance can be witnessed in the evenings only.
